TIRED OF THE IMPOSITION.

There are miles of streets in New York that are cleaned by private subscription. Street-Cleaning Department sweepers and wagons never enter them. They are the for example's sake. cleanest streets in the city, and are those that have been pointed out to show that costs less per mile to clean them than it does to not clean the streets that the Department men are responsible for. They prove that the people's money is wasted. Ope contractor, who sweeps part of Broadway, agrees "to clean in as thorough manner as possible once in every twenty-four hours, before 9 a. m. in Winter and before 8 s. w. in Summer." and that it "be swept so thoroughly that sprinkling shall not be necessary." And this he has done for years.

He must realize the understood is no excuse. misery his neglect is causing in the tenement districts, where, owing to the filthiness of the streets, the air is so vitiated as to be almost unbreathable.

It is no excuse to say that the streets would be cleaned if more money were appropriated, when the big allowance made is not expended as it should be.

CAPTAIN BARAH.

We hear with pleasure that SABAR BERNHARDT contemplates chartering a vessel to take her and her company around the world. This is novel, and novelties are always welcome. But there is another feature which may prove most interesting of all. Sazau has a habit of running things on occasion, especially if they do not run her way.

If a storm should come up and the lightning flash and the thunder roar, not to mention giant waves and things, she would order the captain below decks and woman the bridge herself. Then, in her best La Tosca voice, ahe might order the tiller spliced to the mainsail, or the spanker-boom furled, and get into a fine Adrienne Lecouvreur frenzy when informed that her orders could not be carried out.

Of course the public would miss this at six doltars a miss owing to the difficulties of ferriage, but the rest of the company might enjoy it, if they found time to stop praying for the storm to cease, or dared to leave off lowering the life-boats. But Sanan would enjoy it, and, after all, it would be her ship.
